

Golden pheasant is still on the loose near Donald

THE HUNT FOR THE ELUSIVE golden pheasant continues. Last week, Audrey Wilson looked out of the window of her home on County Road 1 just south of Donald when she noticed the gorgeous bird, which has been on the lamb for two years after escaping from Maureen and Randy Warburton's home on the Old Donald Road. (Last week we reported on several golden pheasant sightings and the frustrated attempts to catch it.) She called her daughter-in-law, Carol Wilson, who tried to catch it with a blanket. She also called Mrs. Warburton, who arrived with some seed to also try to lure the bird out in the open so it could be caught. The golden pheasant was having none of it and flew off across the road. That's one wily pheasant.

It turns out that golden pheasants aren't the only beautifully-coloured birds impressing Highlanders these days. Stephen Patrick phoned to say he and his wife Holly and son Joseph have twice noticed a ring-necked pheasant on the Harburn Road northeast of Haliburton village. The species was introduced to Ontario decades ago, so this one is probably not on the loose from its family. The Patricks say the pheasant is car-stopping gorgeous, with a red head, brown body and green tail.

Icebergs in Haliburton in July? If you've happened to drive around Head Lake in the past week, you've probably noticed this huge, 15-foot-high "thing" floating in front of Glen and Joanne Sharpley's house. This rubber iceberg is the latest in waterfront play toys and the Sharp-leys have been inundated with phone calls from people wanting to know what it is. In case you too are wondering, on a hot summer day you cool off by climbing to the top of the iceberg and sliding down into the water.

Speaking of strange sights on Head Lake, Clay Glecoff was driving into work on a recent Saturday morning when something in the water caught his eye. It was a bull moose with a full stack of antlers. It was heading towards Glebe Park.

Congratulations to the Junior Think Bowl team from J. Douglas Hodgson Elementary School which made it all the way to the provincial championships last Friday at the Frost Centre. Although the team did not place in the top three, Rachel Morgan, Siobhan Creelman, Emily Turner and Bethany Snelgrove certainly made their school and community proud of them. The question they had to think about was "Research indicates that the health of children in Canada is declining. They are less active and more apt to eat 'fast foods' than previous generations. What issues and/or problems are related to this situation? What solutions and action plan can you develop?"

Although students at J. Douglas Hodgson Elementary School were challenged to raise $2,000 for Ryan's Wells, by the time Ryan Hreljac and his mother Susan arrived at the school on Friday, students were able to present a cheque for more than twice that amount. Stuart Baker Elementary School added another $535 to the pot while the Haliburton Rotary Club chipped in another $1,000.

When Ryan Hreljac makes a wish, it comes true

DARREN LUM
Staff Reporter

When most people throw money at a well, they wish for things, but when 11-year-old Ryan Hreljac does that, he accomplishes things.

When Ryan was six, he was told by his Grade 1 teacher in Kemptville, Ontario that unlike Canadian children, the children in undeveloped nations often don't have access to clean drinking water. Ryan has been on a quest ever since to eliminate that inequality and recently paid a visit to the village of Haliburton thanks to the efforts of Rotarian Andy Salvatori.

Last Thursday and Friday, Ryan spoke with 132 people at the Northern Lights Pavilion for the Rotary Club, in the gymnasium at J. Douglas Hodgson Elementary School, and in the recreation room at the Stuart Baker Elementary School, spreading his ideals for clean drinking water for everybody in the world.

By the time he left Haliburton, he had almost $5,000 in local donations for his fundraising effort.

Initially Ryan was told $70 would pay for one well, but after four months of raising the money through house chores, he was told the cost was actually $2,000. Unswayed, Ryan spent several months raising more money and with the help of Canadian Physicians Aid Relief, built his first well in 1998.

Now in addition to attending school, he makes 30 to 40 appearances a year, spreading the message that one person can make a difference.

"Just to make the world a little more equal, all you have to do is pitch in a little bit at a time. If everyone just pitches in a little bit at a time that equals a lot," Ryan said during his Haliburton visit.

His efforts have been recognized by the likes of Oprah Winfrey, Jane Goodall, Prime Minister Jean Chrétien, and Governor General Adrienne Clarkson. His story has been told by newspapers and magazines such as Macleans and Readers Digest.

"It was great to meet the prime minister, but really they're like regular people," Ryan said. "It doesn't matter if you're Jean Chrétien."

His mother, Susan, has been with him every step of the way, but admits that she is still surprised by what she has learned from her son.

"He's taught me a few lessons about who our teachers are in the world. When you think of a teacher, you would think of a teacher in the traditional sense — someone who is within the walls of a school, or is an elder. He's taught me a thing or two about what is possible."

She recalls when he was in Grade 1 and came home agitated. He told her he needed $70 for a water well to save the children in Africa. She and her husband didn't take him seriously at first, but given his persistence, they knew it was something they couldn't ignore.

Five years later he now boasts a total of $500,000 and 80 water wells in Africa, mainly in Uganda and Tanzania, accomplished through the non-profit organization named after him, the Ryan's Well Foundation.

"He just keeps setting himself new goals and I don't judge him anymore about what he is able to accomplish. He keeps setting newer, higher, loftier goals. He's the first one to tell you that it is by spreading the word."

The crusade has not just been about Ryan, but about what other people have done after being inspired by him.

Susan remembers hearing Ryan say during an interview, "I'm like a dandelion. When I tell people my story they tell other people and that's how it's going to spread all around the world. That's how we're going to make a better place."

On Thursday night, Andy Salvatori presented Ryan with a cheque for $1,000 from the Haliburton Rotary Club.

At JDHES, Ryan spoke to a packed gymnasium with 400 children. Through bake sales, freezie sales and individual sales of a brick for the school's new wishing well at $25 each, the school raised an amazing $4,300 over the past two and a half months, even though the goal was only $2,000.

In addition to that total, JDHES students Chyna Schell and Jeff Griffin donated $736 from their draw for a poster commemorating the firefighters who lost their lives September 11 in New York. The poster was donated by Brad Griffin and framed by Luke Schell.

Principal Mike Burke said Ryan plans to continue working towards giving clean drinking water to people around the world by pursuing a career as a water engineer.

"Our school is not ending this either. Each year we are going to try and make this a part of our contribution to our fundraising to help and continue supporting the kinds of things that Ryan is doing. Ryan and Susan, thank you for coming. We wish you well."

After speaking to the JDHES students, Ryan visited with 250 SBES students. Principal Debbie Wales believes Ryan's message is given more credence because of the relative closeness in age he shares with her students.

"They need role models and heroes. Being close to his age they will identify with him and realize the importance of the need for us to help other people who don't have the kinds of things we do."

SBES students presented Ryan a cheque for $535.45, money earned one and two loonies at a time by doing extra chores around the house. (Parents also made donations.)

On Canada Day, Ryan will be on Parliament Hill and is expected to be one of the personalities on CBC during the noon hours show. He is expected to be a special guest at the upcoming G-8 summit later this year in Kananaskis, Alberta.

On Thursday night, Ryan was back to being a regular kid when he was taken tubing by Steve Ferracuti and Kristy Gammon on Lake Kashagawigamog.

ting an operating plan which included the extra funding.

The Ontario Hospital Association is also very pleased with the provincial budget's hospital funding increase of about $700 million. "(It's) a significant step forward in meeting patient care needs across Ontario," says board chair Leo Steven in a press release.

However, the Ontario Long Term Care Association does not share this enthusiasm. Long-term care units across the province, including Hyland Crest in Minden and Highland Wood in Haliburton, are funded by a separate ministry branch and despite lobbying attempts, did not receive as much of an increase as hospitals.

"Less than a quarter of the 'nearly $200 million' announced in the budget for long term care is new operating funding. That's about $1.65 per resident per day. The remainder is funding for previously announced commitments, some first announced back in 1998," says Karen Sullivan, executive director of the OLTCA in a press release.

"As a result," she said, staff will still only have a few minutes a day to provide for the needs of residents who require help with practically every aspect of their daily living, and the residents will still only get one bath a week."

The OLTCA says members require an additional $220 million this year as part of a $750-million increase in operating funding over the next three years.

Sansford says long-term care makes up a "significant portion" of HHHS's budget.

Tenders called for Hwy 35 upgrade

The Ontario government has issued a call for tender to upgrade to Highway 35 north to Highway 121 in Fenelon Falls.

"Safe and reliable highway access at all times of the year is the key to supporting the business and tourist economies of our community," says MPP Chris Hodgson. "I am sure that area residents, cottagers and visitors will be pleased when they see the results of this work."

The project will see the resurfacing of Highway 35 from 0.8 km north of Highway 7B northerly for 15.2 km to County Road 121. This work also includes the addition of a southbound passing lane from Cambray Road to Victoria Road 21.

"I know that, as a result of this work, both driving conditions and highway operations throughout this area will be approved," added Hodgson. "In an increasingly global economy, good highways truly are the road to prosperity."

The Haliburton Legion hosted the 6th annual Highland Games Super Bingo on Wednesday, June 19. There were 116 players contending for the right to scream Bingo and raise money for the Highland Games in Haliburton on July 13. There was $432.07 raised by this year's event while approximately $5,000 has been raised for the games since this event started. The Legion provided the use of the hall while Pizza Den gave out coupons for pizza. The prized Jackpot game worth $1,000 was won by Iris Freeman, third from left.

Budget will help college: Hodgson

MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

Sir Sandford Fleming College's Haliburton campus stands to benefit from new funding programs announced in last week's provincial budget, MPP Chris Hodgson says.

Ernie Eves' first budget as premier sets aside $10-million to be divvied up among campuses in rural areas and "Sir Sandford Fleming College is definitely one of them," says Hodgson, who has been a stalwart supporter of his hometown campus.

The funding is similar to a program for northern campuses.

"It recognizes that we have similar challenges that northern campuses have. It doesn't solve all of [President] Brian Desbiens' problems, but it will help," Hodgson says.

The Lindsay SSFC campus is also eligible.

The budget also includes $50 million for the college's equipment and apprentice programs.

Hodgson says the budget takes "a balanced approach" to the province's fiscal health. There's more money for hospitals and schools, but it also defers a corporate tax reduction to compensate for the "lag time" in corporate earnings following September 11.

"Something's got to give and we chose to make sure that the budget was balanced and there was more money for healthcare," Hodgson says. "We're responding to where the pressures are..."

"Next year's budget will have more good news because the economy's rebounding."

Although his government has been criticized for not adhering to its own legislation about tax reductions, Hodgson says that the budget does honour the province's commitment to lower taxes for small businesses.

The tax rate is now 5.5%, down from roughly 11%.

"Small business is where the jobs are created. It really is the engine of our economy."

There's also a lowering of the tax rate for people with moderate incomes.

Another initiative which may have positive repercussions for Haliburton County is the creation of "enterprise zones", areas which could offer special tax incentives as a way of attracting business. Hodgson points to Toronto's success as "Hollywood North", thanks in part to tax incentives offered to movie companies.

This Friday, long-time Mississauga mayor Hazel McCallion and the rest of her Smart Growth panel will be at the Delta Pinestone to work on some of the details of the program.

Of this year's $65 billion provincial budget, $25.5 billion will be spent on healthcare, $9 billion in interest payments on debt and $14 billion on education, including a $500 million increase. See stories elsewhere in this week's Echo about the budget's impact on local healthcare and education.

Fleming College will break ground for new campus Friday

On Friday, June 28, Fleming College's Haliburton Campus will break ground for the most important and challenging undertaking since its inception, the construction of a new campus.

Supporters will gather to celebrate the groundbreaking ceremony and enjoy lunch from noon until 1 p.m. at the building site in Glebe Park.

At the same time the Friends of Fleming College Foundation will publicly launch the "Creative by Nature" Capital Campaign. Murray Fearrey, Campaign Cabinet Chair, will reveal the goal of the campaign and how much has been raised to date.

Speakers will include: Barb Bolin, Campus Principal; Murray Fearrey, Reeve of Dysart et al; Barbara Beamish, campaign major donor; The Honourable Chris Hodgson, MPP; Don Schmitt, Architect; and Dr. Brian Desbiens, College President.

Fleming College's new campus is expected to open Fall 2003.

Board entitled to extra $5 million for special ed.

Next year, Trillium Lakelands will indeed receive the extra funding that a Ministry of Education audit of its special education program says it deserves.

"Next year they will be funded [the extra money for special education]," MPP Chris Hodgson said in an interview on Thursday.

While Trillium Lakelands has already had an audit of its special education program, the province wants all other boards to undergo a similar review before next year's budget. This would ensure each board is receiving the money it's entitled to for special education programs, Hodgson says.

This is welcome, if not official, news for Trillium Lakelands.

One of the biggest problems facing the board is how much it spends on special education. It currently spends more than it receives. That money comes out of the budgets of other services, such as transportation.

As board chairman Rick Johnson said at the June 11 board meeting, "We've sacrificed so much out of our every day programs - music, library, transportation. We've proved there's a need [for more special education funding] and it's time the government stepped up and put its money where its mouth is."

Director of education David Hill says the board is in a Catch 22 position. In order to prove to the provincial auditors that it needed extra money for special education, it first had to be providing those services. That means the board has to spend money it doesn't have this year in order to get more money next year.

In fact, while the first audit showed the board deserved an additional $3.7 million in special education funding, two subsequent audits have brought that amount up to $5 million.

As well, Hill says "we're getting penalized because other boards are not keeping up [with audits]. We've taken the time to prove these students are in place."

Hill says Hodgson has "gone to bat" for Trillium Lakelands but Hill still has concerns with the province's funding formula. "I have a lot of respect for Chris but he's not the Ministry of Education."

A press release issued by the board last week says that although the provincial budget announced a $400 million infusion for education, "this is not all new money, as the province previously released $350-million of it to be used for everything from textbooks to transportation. The announcements, which coincided with grant releases, are for the most part already factored into Trillium Lakelands' final budget. The government has yet to detail the impact, if any, that the remaining $50 million will have on individual school boards."

For instance, last year the board got a special grant to cover a transportation deficit; this year's funding level, announced as part of the budget, adds that grant to the board's base funding.

When the board's budget was passed, Hill was the most diplomatic about what the board had been able to achieve.

"It's a budget that shows optimism, but which also recognizes the shortfalls of funding," Hill said. "It accentuates the positive."

He congratulated trustees for never losing their principles and placing students first during the lengthy budget deliberations.

Trustee Judy Saunders praised board administrators for their "clarity and patience."

Altogether, the board will spend $148-million to provide education in Kawartha Lakes, Haliburton County and Muskoka.

The board is under several restrictions when setting its budget. It is funded on a per student basis with recognition of certain special needs. The board may not spend less for classroom, special education or school renewal and construction than it receives and may not spend more than it receives on administration. Those conditions are met in this budget.

There will be no reduction in current services even though the board is faced with some new costs, such as testing water wells at a cost of $75,000 a year, and a declining enrollment of two per cent, or 474 students.

The province is helping the board offset the impact of the funding loss through a special program but it doesn't eliminate the fact that with fewer students, there's less funding.

"It changes the slope [of funding reductions] so we don't drop in grants as quickly as we would have," said superintendent Ed Hodgins, who presented the budget.

The board also receives an increase of $100 per student in recognition of the higher costs in rural areas.

Recognizing that not all schools have equal access to technology, the budget will continue to try to address that disparity by upgrading connections. Old computers will be replaced on an ongoing basis.

Rails End needs new foundation, physically and organizationally

SHERYL LOUCKS

Staff Reporter

The Haliburton Highlands Guild of Fine Arts needs new volunteers and new ideas to keep the Rails End Gallery open, board members said at their annual general meeting last Wednesday.

The guild is going into this year approximately $7,000 in the hole.

"I am confident we can get onto sound financial footing," says Joe Smith, guild president.

He says the gallery has to operate more like a business and be more adaptable to the times, which he says it has failed at in the past.

Part of the new strategy he introduced is a package curator Amy Brohm is putting together to show businesses and corporations in order to attract sponsorship for the shows.

Smith explained their biggest asset and stumbling block is the building itself. Built in the 1870s as a train station, it was not, he says, built to last more than a century. Dysart et al, which owns the building, has submitted a SuperBuild application for funding to move the building off the road and into the park onto a proper foundation.

Smith says that will do several things for the structure, most importantly make it heatable in the winter. The guild can not open the building year round which means it cannot apply for Ontario Arts Council funding, as it has under different rules in the past.

"It's extremely frustrating. We've been waiting for two years to get a yes or no from SuperBuild," says Smith.

Core funding has become a priority for the guild. Smith says they are looking into applying for a Trillium grant specifically to pay for a fund-raiser or consultant who can show them how to raise money more effectively. Last year the guild lost $3,000 in fund-raising due to a deficit in the Blast For Cash raffle.

A bit of the financial pressure will be taken off this year when Dysart waives the $5,700 tax bill, but that will by no means solve the gallery's fiscal woes.

There was much discussion during the meeting of taking "brave new steps" such as abandoning the Rails End building and moving the gallery to a winter location elsewhere.

The other, most contentious idea is to change the lower gallery into an expansion of the gift shop. The main concern with this is it would take away the guild's non-profit status in the eyes of granting bodies and even the township, which has not waived the tax bill previously because of it.

One small step towards change was

SHERYL LOUCKS/Echo

Joe Smith, Haliburton Highlands Guild of Fine Arts president, Al Ferguson board member, Amy Brohm curator, Tom Green board member, remain optimistic about the future of the gallery.

the adoption of a new constitution as recommended by the consultant who was hired to do a feasibility study last year. This document has a much stronger focus on operating the gallery as a business instead of a more general guild.

There is also a more clearly delineated power structure within the organization between the board and staff.

Thom Lambert, guild member and former curator, said the guild "chews up and spits out" highly qualified intelligent curators because of blurred lines of authority.

"There is something wrong with this organization when even though the board is made up of incredible, hard-working people, curators have continued to leave on bad terms for the past five years," says Lambert.

Linda Hammond, guild vice-president, assured him board members were volunteers and did not want to run the gallery so the issue has been addressed.

Smoothen operations within the gallery may lead to higher sales as well which saw a slight dip over the last year.

Smith says they will be launching a membership drive and hoping to lean on people's individual talents more effectively through the guild's new committee structure. He says anyone is welcome to attend their board meetings to share ideas.

Family swears they see a crocodile swimming in Kashagawigamog

MARTHA PERKINS

Editor

Has anyone let their pet crocodile out for a swim on Lake Kashagawigamog?

Missing a pet that's about a metre in length, has eyes on the top of its head, bumps along its back and a tail?

If so, then the Ministry of Natural Resources – and The Echo – wants to hear from you.

On Monday, a cottager on Clees on the Rocks dropped by The Echo office to tell us that his daughter, son-in-law and a neighbour saw what they swear was an alligator swimming along the surface of the lake on Sunday.

The family also called the Minden office of the Ministry of Natural Resources.

Call us skeptical here at The Echo, but when we first were told about it, we thought that the strange apparition might turn out to be a fairly large snapping turtle.

"We have no idea what it is because we haven't seen it," says the MNR's Bill Hutson.

"It's not a big danger if it is a snapping turtle. There aren't too many occasions when a snapping turtle will come out and get a hold of someone."

The MNR has, however, placed calls to the Peterborough Zoo and the Indian River Reptile Zoo.

Bry Loyst, a curator at the Indian River Reptile Zoo, says that if it is a member of the crocodile family, it's probably a Caiman. Often, people who buy them as pets find they get a bit too big for comfort and release them.

"He'd stake his life on it not hurting anyone," says the MNR's Gerry Moraal, who talked with Loyst on the telephone. "Even if it was six feet long it would avoid people."

"I don't think there's any fear for people."

Loyst says that if it's a Caiman, which are originally from South and Central America, it won't survive a winter. A river and swamp dweller, it eats small fish and amphibians and would be almost impossible to catch since it can stay submerged for more than an hour.

If you happen to see it, please call the MNR at 286-1521.

Public voice wanted for official planning

SHERYL LOUCKS

Staff Reporter

An Official Plan is one of those long, jargon-laden documents no one thinks about until a new housing development is staked out in their backyard.

Dysart et al is now in the process of drafting a whole new Official Plan for the first time in 25 years and although it may seem to be as important as watching commercials, the reality is if you take the simile one step further, it actually dictates the programming.

Ratepayers are being asked to give their input in several ways, such as speaking directly with members of council, posting feedback on the county's website at www.county.haliburton.ca or by attending a series of public meetings, the first to be held on July 19 at the Royal Canadian Legion in Haliburton from 4 p.m. to 8 p.m.

In a nutshell the Official Plan is the blueprint council uses to construct all decisions on land use.

That does not mean, however, that only those people interested in buying or developing land should pay attention. Pat Martin, Dysart's planner says you have to look at the bigger picture of what "land use" actually means.

"Clear land use policies will protect the environment, support and encourage a sound economy and guide sustainable resource development," Martin explained. "It's not as specific as impacting the rules regarding how you build your deck but it will dictate how we develop the roads to get an ambulance, for example, from a developed lake to a hospital."

This is the average citizen's chance, she says, to put democracy to work. To influence what areas in the township people want to see protected or perhaps mined, logged or commercially used.

It is an enormous project to rewrite an Official Plan, therefore Dysart has hired a private consultant, Anthony Usher to assist staff. His fee is part of the approximately $50,000 project cost.

The document has to follow new and evolving rules from the provincial level but more challenging is coordinating maps, terminology and philosophy with the county. In the past, Martin says, Haliburton County municipal offices did not have a planning department - that was left to the townships.

The provincial government has dictated this must change but the problem is the county can not pass a new Official Plan without knowing the details of the township. This has created a temporary reverse in the normal flow of things since policy decisions are usually supposed to come from the province to the county and down to the townships.

A draft county plan has been drawn up, but Martin says, her department has far more detailed maps and information that are not at the moment jiving with the county's.

"In the county plan, Lipsey Lake is not identified as being a waterfront community but we know in five to 10 years from now it will be developed. Hurricane Lake is also not recognized but there are already cottages and major summer camps there," says Martin.

She does not believe this will be a huge hurdle to overcome. There has already been meetings between all of the township planners, who are also going through this process, and the county and there will be more to iron out such wrinkles.

Martin's advice is for people to monitor the website where background documents from various provincial ministries and the consultant will be posted, with the first of them to be appearing within the next two weeks. To reach Dysart's portion of the site follow the links from county homepage for municipal, county and local governments to Dysart.

For more information call the municipal office at 457-1740.

DON'T LET MOSQUITOES SUCK THE LIFE OUT OF YOUR SUMMER.

Introducing The Most Effective Control of Biting Insects. Ever!

Used by the USDA, proven by the Coast Guard, the Mosquito Magnet® virtually eliminates blood-seeking insects without pesticides.

This is the biting insect abatement system written about in the New York Times and Wall Street Journal. Developed in conjunction with the US Center for Disease Control, the Mosquito Magnet is the only proven method for eliminating mosquitoes, no-see-ums, and black flies.

The Mosquito Magnet emits a warm, moist plume of carbon dioxide that mimics the exhaled breath of humans, which is what attracts insects to bite humans. The insects are drawn from within a one acre area to the Mosquito Magnet, where they are vacuumed into a net to dehydrate and die within 24 hours. In six to eight weeks, practically the entire population collapses as egg-laying females are destroyed. No eggs. No insects.

Powered by a 20lb. propane tank which generates its own electricity and carbon dioxide, the Mosquito Magnet is ideal for backyards, waterfront properties and woodland areas. Completely portable. There is no need for electricity, the Mosquito Magnet is placed near the breeding site of the insects, which traps them at their source, and keeps them away from you.

The Mosquito Magnet is on duty 24 hours a day - continuously attracting and trapping biting insects so that you can enjoy your outdoor life again.

On a personal note...

Just after my second year in Ryerson's journalism program, I had a summer job at the Lindsay Daily Post. Using the job as an excuse, I plucked up enough courage to ask one of my favourite authors, Timothy Findley, for an interview. He agreed, and my afternoon in Cannington with him and his partner Bill Whitehead turned out to be an absolute delight. Both men were so gracious, letting me into their lives, giving me a tour of their house and treating me the same as they would a writer from Books in Canada. I was floating as I drove down their driveway and headed for home.

Being 20, I thought my story was pretty decent. I probably also had the vanity to believe it was as good as any story Books in Canada would run.

— martha perkins

Of course, reading the story years later, I realized it was dry, flat and lacking any of the sparkle of that magical afternoon. With that came almost a sense of shame — these two fine gentlemen had given up an afternoon of their busy lives to talk to a reporter who didn't have the writing skill to warrant such a privilege. They probably knew it wouldn't be a very good story before they agreed to the interview, too. They probably recognized me for what I was — a student with more confidence than ability — and yet they accepted me for what I was, and treated me with respect. It takes really special people to do that.

Prone to guilt as I am, in 1996 I wrote a letter to Findley, apologizing to him for all those things I've just mentioned. It shouldn't come as a surprise that he took the time to write back to me.

This is what he said: "Thank you for your note, and although my memory of meeting you is more vivid than my memory of the article, I'm sure you have nothing to apologize for. Especially if, as I assume, you are the Martha Perkins I hear regularly and enjoy thoroughly on Ontario Morning."

"We are in the process of finishing three books and moving in two directions at once (to a writing retreat in France and to another Canadian base) so I'll simply wish you well and get back to work..."

"Warmest regards from Bill, too... Cordially yours, Tiff." I was twice blessed by a truly great man.

A few days ago, Timothy Findley died in France at the very young age of 71. All Canadians have lost one of our best writers, a man who gave voice to the characters that live in all of our psyches. Findley battled depression all of his life, and yet he emerged from those dark times with a sensitivity and a grace that made him an even better person than he was an author.

It's so deeply tragic that his voice has been silenced, much, much too early.

It's graduation day

Today and tomorrow, all other aspects of community life will stop when people gather in our schools for student graduations. Through years of hard work, both the students and their parents have earned the right to be very proud of this achievement.

There is one sad note. School will truly be out in Gooderham this Wednesday. This year's graduating class will be its last; the school is slated for closure. Recognizing the difficulty of teaching children in small, split grade classes, especially with today's curriculum demands, the school board has decided to transfer the 40 remaining students to Haliburton. Gooderham, too, should be proud of what its school has been able to accomplish. Its time may be over, but its legacy will continue.

Global warming and the outdoorsman

I was on the couch, eyes closed, contemplating life in general and physics in specific. To be exact, I was practising inertia; something I was getting the hang of at an impressive rate. But just as I was about to set some sort of provincial record, that familiar voice grated over the airwaves.

"Tired, are we?" she asked between snickers.

My wife's soft voice jolted my eyes open in the way that straddling an electric fence could never do.

"No, not at all," said I. "In fact, I was just formulating a theory about global warming and the outdoorsman."

"More like you were formulating a snore!" she blurted.

I sat up, looking hurt. Actually, I was hurt. I had moved my weary bones much too abruptly. You see, I had just spent a day fishing on a remote creek and was still suffering from the dramatic effects of climate change.

During this little expedition, my buddy Tom and I made several scientific observations that I am sure would be of interest to most outdoors types. They even held my wife's attention.

The first thing that I noticed was how hard this kind of work had become as compared to twenty years ago, prior to global warming. As I walked up and down hills, I found myself gasping for oxygen, which once had been there but now had obviously slipped out through one of the many holes in the ozone layer.

Tom suggested that aging might also be part of this equation, but his wild theory was quickly discarded before we took a break for the two o'clock nap. The warm milk he had in his thermos helped us see things in better perspective.

Global warming also seemed to be responsible for the facts that each of us sank a little deeper in the muddy banks this time out. It was evident that this had a softening effect on not just the polar ice caps but on streamside mud too. We discussed this after prying ourselves into our waders and each of us was in total agreement here.

Following that, we reminisced about how, in the old days before global warming we could have cleared ourselves new and better trail using only a Swiss Army knife — the kind with the saw attachment, of course. And when Tom produced one I was truly overjoyed. It was unfortunate that the blade was so dull though. Otherwise we'd have cleared one there and then.

At this point my wife suggested — how shall I say this delicately — that there were pasture patties flying to and fro. She even went so far as to say that we were simply getting too old for this kind of thing.

This, of course, was utter nonsense, and just to prove it I did a push up — just one, mind you. I didn't think there was anything to be gained by labouring the point.

Of course, when I rose mere minutes later, she mistook my smile for a grimace. It's a curse that I share with Clint Eastwood — that and raw toughness.

Anyhow, she remained unconvinced. She'll believe in the anti-aging properties of miracle creams and she has absolute faith in the plausibility of a romance novel, but she can't seem to find the credibility in my tales. You'd think I was a federal politician or something.

And yet, I explained all of this to her, in hopes that she would learn from my vast storehouse of outdoor wisdom and experience. When I told her as much she burst out laughing. So I consoled myself with the fact that true genius often goes unappreciated in its time. And content in that knowledge, I had a much-needed snooze.

Memories stirring

FEELING AS LIMP AND DAMP as a used rag, Becky wiped the back of her hand across her forehead and heaved a sigh. Her body was sticky all over and worse in the creases. She could taste salt every time she ran her tongue over the outside of her lips and she did that often to catch some of the drops making their way down her face. Although it was June, it could more easily have been the end of July.

For Becky, the big cottage clean-up push was on. Her kids would be out of school in a few days and then they would all be heading north for the summer. This was her chance to clean out old sand, broken toys and mouse-spoiled clothing. Although theirs was a simple, basic kind of cottage, Becky still liked to have it looking good, to start the season fresh. This weekend was also a chance for her to reconnect to the cottage that had been a part of her life for as long as she could remember. In a world of changes, of new jobs, new babies and new relationships, the cottage was a constant.

The place had changed over the years, but not to any great extent. Becky was still able to step inside and feel fifty Julys and Augusts well up inside her like a collective wave of memories. The slightly damp smell of the pine walls, the cool smooth old linoleum floors, the faded curtains always hanging crookedly in the same places. Then the rush of fragrant warmth from outside when she opened the windows, letting in the sunny breezes to air out the rooms.

There were memories and stories connected with almost every piece of furniture, every nick knock on a wall or shelf. Birthdays and anniversaries had been marked here over the years. Secrets told, promises made and friendships cemented. Here her parents had sat up until the early morning hours, deep in talk as the moon spilled through the screened windows. On that folding cot she had stretched out with her new puppy and listened to the wind sighing past the pine trees. But now it was time for a break and so Becky grabbed a frosty can of pop and headed outside. Her brother Tom was just down the hill, doing the same thing as his cottage, the family's former guest cabin. She banged on his screen door, announcing she wanted some company in the shade. In a moment he had joined her in a chair on the patio, another pine giving them some respite from the noon sun. The familiar sigh of wind and pine was a relaxing backdrop to their conversation.

They each compared the damage done by mice and dampness over another year and spoke of their planned projects for the upcoming few months. A new sink here, a couple of shelves there. They helped each other out and their children played together, treating both cottages as their own. Although husbands and wives had been shed, the two of them - always close - had remained fast and true to each other. Sometimes they were able to finish each other's sentences or say but a word or two for the other to understand what was meant. It was a special relationship and they were glad their children were also so connected.

They both agreed that it was at the cottage that they missed their mother most. For years after their father had died, their mother had stayed on at the cottage by herself while they continued to come up on weekends and then for their two weeks' holidays. They would see her moving in that funny little shuffle she had, back and forth to the outhouse or to her garden of yellow beans and tomatoes. Becky swore that was all her mother ate most of the summer, with the odd boiled egg and toast thrown in for variety.

She had her favourite vantage points, as she called them. Becky and Tom would be sitting in the river, having a before-bed dip and look up to see mom sitting in the dark in her wicker chair, cigarette glowing, watching them. They'd wave and she'd wave back. Or Becky, up for the weekend, would round the corner, heading out to pick raspberries, and there would be her mother, sitting on the back patio gazing at the lake, a drink in one hand and the ubiquitous smoke in the other. She'd turn quickly, almost as though expecting to see someone other than Becky standing there. Then she'd give her crooked smile and wave one of her occupied hands in salute.

The hardest for Becky was sitting as she was now with Tom and looking back up the hill to the cottage. So many times she had done just that and seen her mother outlined on the cottage stoop, calling them for a meal or to the phone or to run an errand. First she would always let out a hoot to get their attention, then she'd wave them to come. She had this way of standing with most of her weight on one foot that gave her a lopsided look that could be mistaken for nobody else. For years after her death, Becky found herself looking at the stoop, expecting to see her there.

They finished their pop, each reluctantly rising to get back to their respective cleaning. It was too nice a day for inside work but it had to get done. Tom suggested Becky return for burgers and salad in a few hours and she gratefully accepted. But first, she said, let's both have a dip in the river and pretend mom is up there watching us. He looked at her, then smiled, knowing what she meant. For of course, she was.

letters to the editor

Sobey's image not enhanced

To the Editor:

It's funny how things change; what looks good today may not be so good tomorrow. Case in point is the ongoing feud between IGA and Valu mart.

As a long-time cottager of the Highlands, I spent the winter looking forward to returning in the spring and seeing and trying out the new IGA. I saw the spread of the opening of the new store in The Echo and thought that this might be a good addition to the town and with the later hours and increased selections more convenient for our family.

After recently trying out the new IGA, I thought that our needs had now been met. Now, however, after reading the article "Grocery Wars" in The Echo June 18, I'm not too sure. The idea of Sobey's challenging the building of another new and improved grocery store for the Highlands has me questioning their motives. Over the years the two stores have sometimes tried to outdo each other, by expansion and upgrades to their stores, the spite fence between the two properties, and price wars. These were sometimes comical to us cottagers as we would come up each weekend to see what was going on.

But now it seems that the stakes might have been raised a little higher and this time it might cost us money. Every dollar spent, wasted, to work out this fight between two businesses to one-up each other, costs us, the taxpayers of the Highlands! The time has come to take a stand and I for one have decided to not shop at the new Haliburton IGA and the IGA in Toronto until Sobey's gives up on their wasteful petition to as I see it outdo Valu mart!

Calling into question the ethics of our elected officials does nothing to enhance Sobey's image and the image of the Haliburton Highlands. A new and improved Haliburton is the way to encourage people to come, visit, and maybe stay in the Highlands. Let's not be spiteful but just try and work this out for all of our interests!

Sobey's motion petty

To the Editor:

I read about the move by Sobey's to block the construction of the new Valu mart Store on Hwy 121. I must admit, I was surprised to actually see it but not surprised in the least.

For a village that is constantly trying to find new ways to entice people to shop locally, one would think that some expansion and diversification from the already saturated main street would be a good thing. With new businesses,

THREE GUYS are gathered 'round a kitchen table in hunt camp at Haliburton Forest. As the rain hurls itself against the windows, a deep-throated growl of thunder shakes the cabin with its furious might seconds before the night sky explodes with a flash of brilliant light.

Tall tales are not out of place in this setting – stories of blood-sucking blackflies right out of a 1950s horror flick, huge fish that somehow manage to disengage themselves from the hook just before they're to be yanked out of the lake, and a gigantic moose that stares you down in a thrilling game of blink along a deserted forest road.

But the mood turns somber when one of the three men, the tall one with the sandy-coloured hair and a jaw line that can stop all arguments, begins telling ghost stories. Real ghost stories. About living in the bowels of hell for three months.

These are stories that Dan Archbold rarely tells, not to his wife, his children and certainly not to the thousands of people he has escorted through the graveyard of 2,500 dead known around the world as Ground Zero. Only his fellow New York firefighters know these stories. But there's something about being in the midst of a vast forest, exposed to the primordial forces of nature, that can make a person journey to the centre of his soul and back again.

Here are some of the stories told along the way.

The story of finding a woman's hand and forearm. The hand instantly transforms her into an entire person, with her own story to tell. When did she put on the nail polish and why did she choose that colour? Was it to go with the outfit she wore to work at the World Trade Centre on September 11? That wedding ring means she was married. Did she have children? Who bought her those bracelets?

Yet as soon as the gaze moves up from the wrist, where the flesh turns into a skeleton, the questions end. Now Archbold knows the answer to that one, definitive, sickeningly horrible, question. What happens when terrorists fly a hijacked plane into the side of one of America's pillars of economic strength? Hundreds of innocent people, including this woman and 353 of Archbold's fellow firefighters, die.

Another lightning bolt flashes across the sky, briefly illuminating the three men, and another story is told.

A firefighter's widow arrives at the site where Archbold has found a small piece of flesh, taken a GPS reading of its precise location, put it in a plastic bag, numbered it and sent it off to a lab which matched it with the DNA of this woman's husband, one of the 343 firefighters who died simply because they were doing their job. This is as close as the widow will get to being able to bury her husband's remains and the group stands in a quiet tableau of bowed heads while she places flowers on the rubble.

There's a heavy silence among the three men – even thunder wouldn't dare interrupt them – before Archbold tells his next story, and his next. But the stories that Dan Archbold feels comfortable telling Brad Griffin and Peter Fromme-Douglas as they sit around that kitchen table become too intensely personal to share with a newspaper's readers now that the three men have emerged from their four-day respite and taken their seats at another kitchen table, this time at Griffin's home near West Guilford.

The three men had first met at Ground Zero last December and it's only because of Griffin's sheer determination (Archbold and Fromme-Douglas call it something far less complimentary) that they recently got together for a few days in the Highlands.

Fromme-Douglas is an artist from Bracebridge, Griffin his business manager. Last December, the two were in New York to attend a fundraising auction for the firefighters' widows and orphans fund. Fromme-Douglas had donated his painting of firefighters at Ground Zero, garnering $36,000 (U.S.) for the fund and a hug from then-New York Mayor Rudy Guiliani for Fromme-Douglas.

Peter Fromme-Douglas took this stunning picture of Ground Zero, across the top, in December when New York firefighter Dan Archbold, above, took him and West Guilford's Brad Griffin to the top of fire house 10.

Tomorrow is September 11?

While they were there, they somehow managed to get a tour of Ground Zero, a tour that culminated in climbing to the roof of the fire station right at the edge of the yawning pit of horror. Their tour guide was Archbold, a New York fireman, whom they knew only as Arch. They were together for only 45 minutes before it was time for Fromme-Douglas and Griffin to leave and for Archbold to give another group a glimpse of hell.

But really, this story should start almost two months before then. This story should start just before 9 a.m. on September 11, 2001.

Peter Fromme-Douglas was at home in Bracebridge. It's a rather unassuming place to find a man in search of his life quest, but several years earlier, Fromme-Douglas had gone through what he calls a time of personal growth and as a result, "my quest for the past 10 years has been trying to find something to do of value."

Art had become too much of a monetary pursuit; Fromme-Douglas would paint a painting, someone with a lot of money would buy it, the painting would disappear from his life and the relationship ended.

"I got tired of doing paintings for the rich," he says. "I had wealth and fame and all that crap. I walked away from it because it was killing me... I wanted to do something for the big picture."

Because he often keeps his television on all night, on September 11 he awoke to the images of black smoke spuming out of the tops of the World Trade Centre buildings before the buildings collapsed with grotesque grace, creating an empty space where minutes before there had been the workplace of tens of thousands of people.

"I didn't get out of bed for two days," Fromme-Douglas says. "There, on the television screen, was pain and suffering and death – what could I do when the only thing I can do is paint? But in my world, I have to act."

A few days later, he and Griffin got together and Griffin showed Fromme-Douglas a photo of firefighters hoisting a large American flag above the rubble at Ground Zero. It was a modern-day Iwo Jima.

"I stored that image away and started to do a painting," Fromme-Douglas says, his gaze as intent as his desire to create something meaningful. "I tried to make an image that would create empathy, respect and support for the firefighters, who were the one group going into the buildings while others fled."

It was difficult, emotional work for Fromme-Douglas, who doesn't paint "unhappy things." The image he came up with, first in pastels, shows three firefighters with bent heads, working amidst the rubble of Ground Zero. In the centre of the image, other firefighters raise the flag, while in the dust-filled air above them floats an image of a fallen colleague.

"I wanted to make the firefighters look like they were made out of rubble, as if they were part of it," he says. "I wanted to combine the suffering of that day – the look, the feel – but also the American patriotism that comes to the surface whenever they're under duress... All lines point towards the centre, of them raising the flag. All emotions are packed into that image... There's something so honourable and selfless about being a firefighter."

He called the painting "In Memorium, With Love and See Firefighter's page 16

Firefighter's job was to chart where body parts found

Respect from Canada," and then, quoting himself, "I could not see what I saw, and not do what I did."

A friend told them about the fundraising auction in New York and Fromme-Douglas and Griffin quickly decided to donate the painting. Even more quickly, Fromme-Douglas had to re-do it in oils in time for the December 8 auction.

The auction itself was not a "big deal" for Griffin, who was more interested in meeting some of the firefighters, but for Fromme-Douglas, the prospect of meeting Mayor Rudy Giuliani was one of the biggest thrills in his life.

"I was really overwhelmed that Giuliani showed up at all," Fromme-Douglas says. "I've met movie stars and kings and there was no one else I wanted to be in the presence of than Mayor Giuliani. [On television], I saw him hold the whole world together. It was an amazing thing he accomplished."

The event raised $1-million but even more priceless for Fromme-Douglas is a photo of him locked in a bear hug with his hero.

Since they were in New York, the men felt impelled to visit the hole where the World Trade Towers 1 and 2 once stood, proud sentinels of New York's skyline.

"It was like coming across a car accident – you have to have your look but once you do, you say 'Did I really want to look?' Should you really be there?," Griffin says of the push and pull of emotions. How could they go to New York and not see Ground Zero? But how can you be a tourist at what is ultimately a burial site for 2,500 people?

"I was ashamed to want to go there but the artist in me was driving me there to see it," says Fromme-Douglas.

"We would have done whatever it took to be there," Griffin says. (As it happens, what it took was two compassionate police officers who turned a blind eye to their presence in exchange for a poster, the two Canadians' proof that they genuinely cared about those who died.)

Dan Archbold had been living with the enormity of the destruction ever since 7 a.m. on September 12, when he showed up at Ground Zero, determined to do something, anything, to help.

The previous day he had been helping to build a house in the Hamptons when he heard about the attack. Thoughts of anything else fled his mind as he rushed back to his workplace, Ladder 134 Far Rockaway. That afternoon, the firefighters who were not immediately called to the World Trade towers gathered in a stadium, awaiting orders. Their frustration was palpable and, by early the next morning, unbearable.

Archbold, like so many of his colleagues, was born to be a firefighter. His grandfather was a firefighter, as was his father, one of the true heroes in young Dan's life.

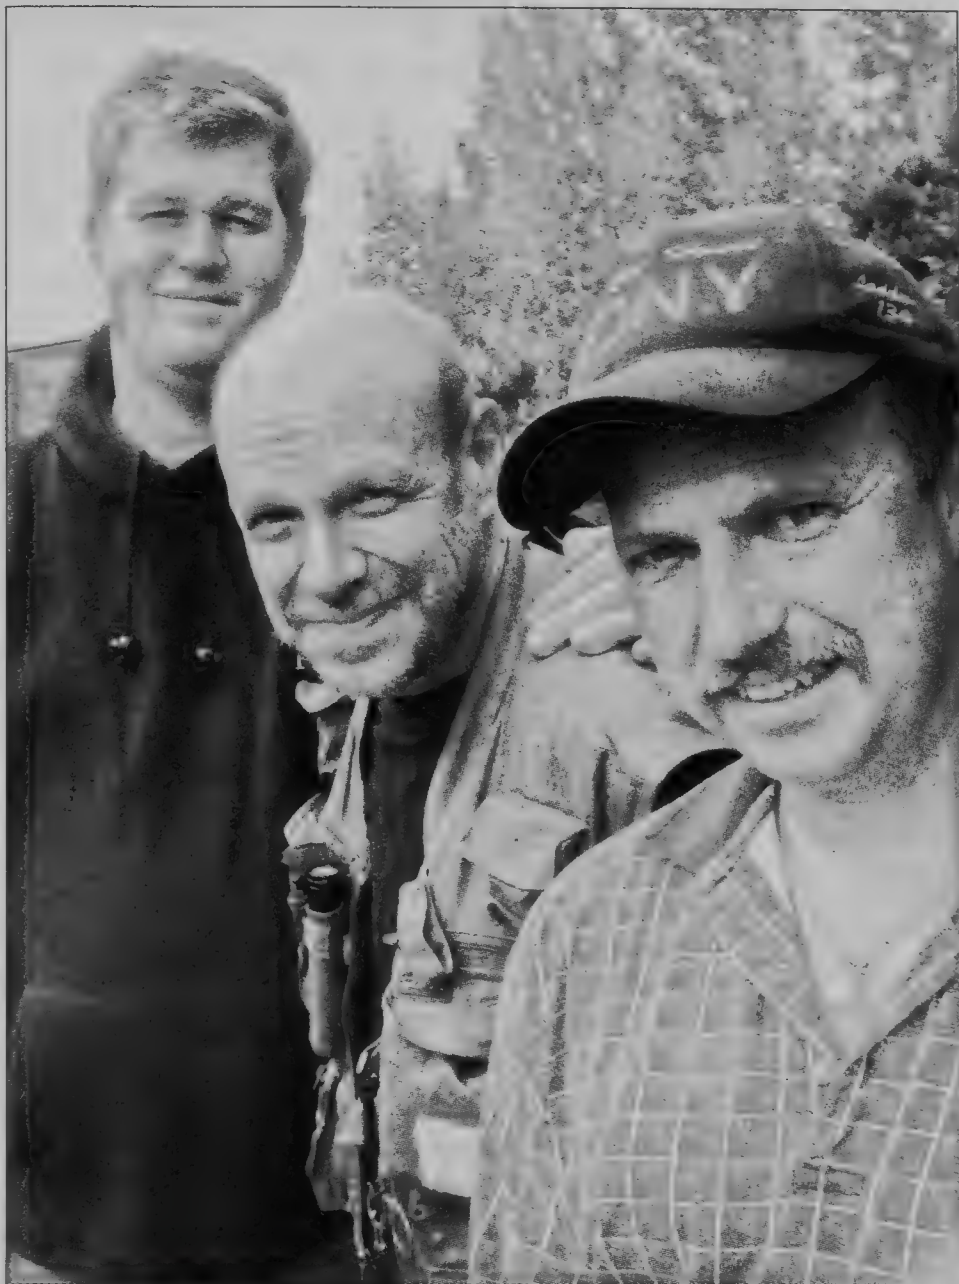

"Why wouldn't you want to be what your hero is," he asks with that Long Island accent that comes straight out of the movies. "My father was a hero – he goes to work, helps people and everyone likes him."

Archbold wanted to help people, too, which is why he simply couldn't wait for his superiors to tell him what he could do to help his fallen brethren. He simply showed up at Ground Zero and went to work clearing the rubble, hoping beyond hope that he'd also still be able to fulfill his prime duty of rescuing people.

Yet he also had another sense of duty, to his own fire house (don't you dare call it a firehall). Not thinking about sleep or family, he'd spend as much time as he could at Ground Zero before showing up for work, putting in a full shift and then returning to Ground Zero. This happened for a few weeks before he was seconded by Station 10, right next to Ground Zero, to help record the discovery of body parts.

"My job was to chart with a GPS every body part they found – foot, toe, guts, gore. We put them in a bag, put a GPS marking of where it was found. We did that every day, all day, 20, 30, 50 times a day."

He'd work 24 hours on, 48 hours off. In those 48 hours, he'd go to a firefighter's funeral, go home to sleep, go to a couple more funerals, go home to sleep, go to a funeral and then start charting body parts all over again.

Four days in a hunt camp have made fast friends of New York firefighter Dan Archbold, Bracebridge artist Peter Fromme-Douglas and his manager, Brad Griffin of West Guilford.

"New York City firefighters do not leave anyone dead in a building."

Part of his job was taking dignitaries and others on tours of the sacred grounds. This was almost as emotionally trying as helping with the clean-up. After all, here was the burial site of 353 of his brothers and these people wanted to make themselves somehow feel better, feel they were somehow doing something to help, through some sort of visceral sharing of their pain.

At first, Archbold resented their presence, but gradually he began to accept them in the hope that they in turn would go back to their homes and workplaces and raise money for the firefighters' widows and children.

"You try to make sure you don't act like an asshole," he says. "Sometimes I felt like I'd had enough, I'd want them to go away and let me do my job. But you convince yourself every day to keep on, because you tell yourself that they're there for you."

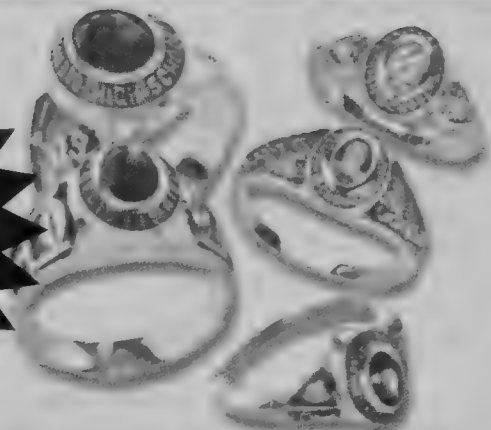

Some people, however, were obviously there for themselves, and their own perverse sense of reflected glory and suffering. Archbold doesn't include Fromme-Douglas and Griffin (who were accompanied by actress Cheryl Ladd on their tour) among that crowd.

"People like Brad and Peter were there for one reason – to help me. They were doing a service for my widows and orphans, not to go on David Letterman to say 'I was there.'"

The trip to Ground Zero spurred Fromme-Douglas and Griffin to do more. The donation of the original painting had helped the widows and orphans fund, but could the painting serve another purpose? Could it also help the firefighters back at home? Could it fulfill Fromme-Douglas's life quest of doing something for "the big picture"?

Foregoing the economic spinoffs of producing limited edition prints, the two men decided to go straight to posters. The posters could be sold as fundraisers for other fire departments, and, more precisely, for a memorial that Ontario firefighters want to build at Queen's Park to honour their colleagues who have died in the line of duty.

That's when Griffin enlisted the help of local MPP Chris Hodgson, who's been a faithful supporter of the two men's efforts. Hodgson invited them to sit at the head table at a summit on terrorism held in Niagara Falls in January. It was an honour for the two men, but the evening also marked the beginning of their growing frustration with the project.

You see, Fromme-Douglas has a mind that runs at high rpm's. No sooner had he and Griffin come up with the poster idea, Fromme-Douglas also hit on a way to achieve another one of his life's goals – creating a postage stamp.

A whiz with a computer, Fromme-Douglas created a stamp using an image of his painting. The only word on it was Memorial. His dream was to have Canada and the United States jointly issue the same stamp, his painting, as a memorial to September 11. It had never been done before.

The wheels were set in motion at the terrorism summit and soon they had a meeting arranged in Ottawa with Deputy Prime Minister John Manley, who also oversees Canada Post. (They were supposed to meet with Prime Minister Chrétien, but Manley was already beginning to show his adeptness at filling someone else's shoes.) Manley made all the right noises when Fromme-Douglas showed him his stamp design.

"He stood there and said great idea. I asked him if he could help and he said 'I run the post office.'"

That was in April. Fromme-Douglas and Griffin haven't heard from Manley since. We won't quote them on what they think about that. Suffice to say that together with their frustration at how their idea of selling posters to raise money for the firefighters' memorial has become bogged down in bureaucratic red tape, they haven't been impressed by their first real introduction to the world of Canadian politicking.

"Are two little schmucks from nowhere land the only ones who care about this? Who can lose on this? It's a win, win, win, win, win, win, win. You can't have a safer thing," Fromme-Douglas says

Griffin scoffs at a letter from the head of Canada Post and threatens to move to the United States, where people embrace new ideas. The typed text of the letter patiently spells out the long process that's involved in creating a stamp. Then, handwritten at the bottom of the letter, comes a note that says if the Americans go for the idea of a joint stamp, Canada Post will too.

As a way of shaking off their frustration and despondency, Fromme-Douglas and Griffin decided that they wanted to do something positive that would help at least one firefighter. They wanted to ask Arch, that nice firefighter they had met at Ground Zero, to come to Haliburton for a visit, a reprieve from all that death.

Problem was, they only knew him as Arch. And they knew he had been one of the signatories on three special limited edition prints that Fromme-Douglas had taken from fire hall to fire hall. (Whoops, sorry about that Canadianism. From fire station to fire station.)

"Brad is like a badger," Fromme-Douglas says with a huge grin. "He does not stop until he gets what he's after."

Against all odds, Griffin tracked down Archbold. Archbold was more than a little surprised to hear from them.

"I met these men for 45 minutes out of the 700 hours I was there," Archbold says. "I met thousands of people, hundreds of actors. They sent me photos [of their tour.] 'Thanks, have a nice day.'"

Then, out of the blue, these two men invite him to a hunt camp at a place he'd never heard of as a way of saying thanks.

"I only knew Canada was north," Archbold smiles.

Although it was a respite from hell, Archbold did a surprising amount of talking about his feelings about September 11 during his trip to the Highlands.

For one, he doesn't see himself as a hero. "On September 10, I was a civil servant. On September 11, I was a hero [in the public's eyes.] It was embarrassing. It got to the point I didn't want to leave [Ground Zero] because everyone wanted to hug and touch you."

Archbold calls the Highlands God's country, but there have been times over the past months when he's questioned God's very existence.

"If God is so all powerful, He had to have had the power to stop all this," he says, "but I'm also a Catholic who says God gives us free will.

"There was so much suffering but the good will hopefully outshine the pain that was created. The terrorists thought we were all about money but September 11 has proved that the human spirit is a renewable resource."

He knows he'll never be the same old Arch again. It's hard to have a normal life – get up in the morning, talk with your wife about the intricacies of domestic life, go to work, take the kids to a game – when your mind is filled with images no human being should ever have to see.

"You have to play the facade and then go to work," he says of his attempts not to be consumed by September 11. "It's a struggle. My mind has a hard time with it. You try to play the game as you can, but do you remember the last time a fire department lost 343 men? I don't.

"I'm crying every day. I left a big chunk of me there. These 343 guys were my brothers. That was me. I died there.

"Yesterday was September 11. Today is September 11. You have to embrace it, absorb it, and make it a part of you."

You have to learn to live with death.

But everyone, as a society, should also try to learn to live again as a society, people who have time to talk to one another, do something nice for one another, spend some time with family and friends.

Asked what he'd like people to do in response to September 11, Archbold doesn't talk about political responses or retribution or raising money. Those things may be important, in their time, but September 11 was, is, about something larger than that.

So what should people do?

"Mow your neighbour's lawn if she's a shut-in. Take a friend out to dinner. Do something nice. Say thank you, please, your welcome. Show some humanity.

"And help the firemen in your neighbourhood. When there's a fundraising drive, support it."

"It's all about humanity," says Dan Archbold, who's learned more than he's ever wanted to know about the subject. "It's the one-on-one relationships we have to work on. With all the information we're getting, we think we're more connected, but we're detached. We're voyeurs on television.

"These past few days at the hunt camp, we had a great time, and that's what it's all about."

No pain, no gain

DARREN LUM

Staff Reporter

Pain. It's something that people usually avoid, but with adventure racing it's just part of the experience. That's what I discovered when I competed against 20 others in the Highlands Adventure race hosted by the Wilderness Beyond Adventure Company in Wilberforce on Sunday.

Along with three others, I experienced pain and joy in the great outdoors, racing under the team banner of 3Js and a D.

There is an increasing number of people who seek out competitions called adventure races: a multi-disciplinary event with orienteering, mountain-biking, canoeing, hiking and sometimes rock climbing to test the physical and the mental resiliency of all its participants.

Races can last 36 hours or more for the advanced athletes or can be as "brief" as five to eight hours for people looking for a taste of adventure racing. The shorter race is still not for the faint of heart, as I learned, because competitions cover distances in excess of 30 kilometres.

When you paddle into a headwind for more than an hour, you realize how many muscles you really have – in the top, back, side of your shoulders. You can actually feel every muscle fiber stretch, twinge and contract over joints. The whistle of the wind on the open water is a welcome distraction.

Normally there is an element of stress because of navigation between checkpoints, provided through coordinates on a map and instructions from race directors, but with team leader Jody Mitic, 25, a Royal Canadian Regiment soldier who reads maps for a living, that wasn't a concern during this race for my team.

I learned there is pain and then there is something beyond pain. During the race, when you hurt – and you will hurt, trust me – you just keep going until you don't notice it anymore. There is a place your body goes to when it hurts.

Jody says "Your body gives up telling you you're hurt when it realizes you're not going to stop."

Walking knee high – make that thigh high for me – in water to cross a flooded road helped to alleviate my burning feet, but didn't do anything to help the muscles in my legs.

The lone woman on our team, a 29-year-old high school phys. ed. teacher from St. Catharines named Jodi Combe, was a strong competitor and stayed near the front of most of the sections. The rare occasion she did hang at the back was during the trickier descents in the mountain-bike portion. On a fast fire road

People who compete in adventure races are not masochists. It's the sense of camaraderie between teammates, and, more importantly between competitors. Suffering just happens to be shared by everyone. What attracts people to run through the woods for hours on end is the human need for the sense of community and the satisfaction of completion.

Chris Petrow not hopeful he'll actually be playing in California this year

Given his high draft number, he fully expects to be playing for the Oshawa Generals again this fall.

"The training camp will provide a lot of experience," says the 6'3" defencemen.

The draft was held over two days at the Air Canada Centre in Toronto and Chris says he was getting ready to leave when his agent Pat Morris, whose company represents the likes of Curtis Joseph and Jason Arnott, said to wait because there was talk Anaheim was going to pick him.

"Pat told me to hold on and see what happens," he says. "Then I got drafted and had to get something like 40 pictures taken of me with coaches and scouting staff."

Chris says the reason he went so late in the draft is because of lack of exposure.

"Pat told me because I only played 34 games with Oshawa, nobody really wanted to take a risk on me in the earlier rounds."

After leaving Haliburton to pursue his hockey career, he shared his time between the Cobourg Cougars and the Generals, but finished the season with Oshawa recording six points (one goal and five assists) in 29 regular season games and 2 assists in five playoff games.

Chris, a former Haliburton Husky, is the son of Russ Petrow of Haliburton. His mother was the late Brenda Ripley.

Next week be sure to look for a more detailed story on Mike Bradley and his experiences in a CFL training camp.

KENNETH JACKSON/Echo

Chris Petrow is spending part of his summer working out at Millennium Fitness so he'll be ready if the Anaheim Mighty Ducks do indeed put him on the roster this fall. Born and raised in Haliburton, he's been playing for the Oshawa Generals.

Pro-lifers often there to help people in need

To the Editor:

Re: "Pro-Life focus is too narrow".

Every year in Canada 100,000 babies die an unimaginable, horrible death through abortion. Some die slowly through salt poisoning or suctioning and some are born alive and left to die. Reason enough to be focused on babies?

As many have seen, we do not hide - we are out there for all to see this reality. We Show the Truth on city streets, in small towns, on busy highways and in front of high schools because our young adults deserve to know the truth and the consequences of what being sexually active can do to them physically, emotionally and spiritually.

The allegation that we "only express interest in promoting human fetal life", is totally untrue. Most pro-life people are involved in many different endeavors in the community. Locally they are involved in the 4Cs, the food bank, palliative care, H.A.V.E., police support, church oriented programs, pastoral care and volunteer many hours at the nursing homes. Pro-lifers are also involved with foster care, adoption, and help struggling families and expectant mothers. Pro-life agencies and individuals are here to help those in need.

But even if none of us lived up to our social obligations, it does not change the reality of killing tiny babies. Abortion is the foundation of a violent society.

You are right, babies are not self sufficient. So would you suggest that we euthanize our seniors and our mentally or physically challenged, because they need help emotionally, physically or financially? Do you want to become a truly nihilistic society?

"The right to life" is the first right enshrined in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. If we continue to legally kill the most defenseless of society, no one is safe from those in power. Pro-life stands for the right to life from conception to natural death.

Rose Barry,
Haliburton

Crisis pregnancy centres are there to help mothers

To the Editor:

Re: Pro-life focus is too narrow [letters, June 18, 2002]

I totally agree with the assertion in last week's letter that it is vitally important to care for both mother and baby in a crisis pregnancy. Crisis Pregnancy Centres across Ontario and the rest of Canada were set up to provide exactly that service.

Volunteers at these centres provide pre-natal and post-natal care in emotional and practical ways. Most have a care closet of maternity clothes, baby items, and formula [when needed]. I know of cases where prescription needs have been looked after, as well as grocery needs, on an ongoing basis. Women are taken to pre-natal and post-natal doctor's appointments.

Doctors who believe in the services provided by these centres frequently provide free pre-natal care and delivery for the clients of the Centres who have no health coverage. Indeed the centres do nurture life. In my ten years at one pregnancy centre, I have never met such caring, dedicated people. Within an easy drive of Haliburton County, there are two such centres... one in Orillia, another in Lindsay.

I believe that the majority of pro-lifers have a broad concern for the life of both mothers and babies. I would, therefore, disagree with the suggestion that pro-lifers are only interested in human fetal life.

Support, not judgement, is needed

To the Editor:

Action on emotions based on logical thought equals lasting results. Action on emotions without logical thought equals a lynch mob.

People such as Dr. Henry Morgentaler and June Callwood, intelligent, educated and caring, do not have to expose themselves and their families to the verbal abuse and risk of life they receive. They are just two of many who have experienced the dark side of life and are taking an active moral stand to help those in need and correct our system.

Many things determine the right answer to any problem. I'm sure a woman goes through a very emotional, soul-searching time when contemplating an abortion. Whatever her decision, it should be hers. Friends should be there as a support group, not a judgment group.

There are many things in life I do not have answers for, e.g., why do many preach "Do unto others" ... but they don't! Why can't women become priests? Why do so many followers of all religions seem to put more importance on professing the faith than practicing its principles?

One thing I do know - I'm thankful for having a free press. A press where many points of view can be expressed. The reader now has the opportunity to draw their own conclusion.

I offer you a quote from an old friend. She said "I think people should spend more time, each in their own way, trying to build a heaven on earth instead of collecting air mile points for a first class ticket to the great beyond".

The Golden Pheasant too fast to catch

To the Editor:

Re: The Golden Pheasant seen around the Harburn Road

Last fall it escaped. I am not surprised it survived the winter as they are a very hardy bird and can withstand bitterly cold weather. It's a bird of the forest and mountains of central China and other areas of Asia, so can always find something to eat.

The males are one of the most brilliantly coloured of all birds. The females are not as pretty, more like a partridge. Just the opposite with us humans. They are hard to catch in the wild. Eight or 10 feet is usually as close as you can get. I did snare one once. It was a young male not yet in full color, that got away.

It reminds me of this travelling salesman driving the back roads in the country - looking in his mirror he sees this speck on the road. It was getting close so he sped up to 50 m.p.h. It was still gaining on him; at 60 m.p.h. it was passing him. Then he saw it was a three legged chicken. It cut across the field and headed for the barn.

When he drove up the lane everywhere he looked. All he could see were three legged chickens running around the yard.

The farmer explained that he and the wife and son all liked chicken legs so they developed these three legged birds.

The salesman said that was amazing - how do they taste - farmer said "Well mister, I really don't know, never been able to catch one."

Pheasants are fast fliers for short distances.

Sour grapes at Sobeys

new families and a new Sir Sandford Fleming College campus coming to town, it would seem that Haliburton is finally growing and attracting permanent residents to the area, another positive thing. The Sobeys motion to the OMB is petty, small-minded and, I think, quite detrimental to our community.

I recall reading in The Echo not long ago that the IGA welcomed competition but I guess that's only when they aren't directly involved. I think the people of Haliburton should be entitled to exercise free-enterprise and freedom of choice. This is a ridiculous waste of time and money and clearly shows that although the name is IGA Market Fresh, they still have sour grapes.

Korea
on my mind

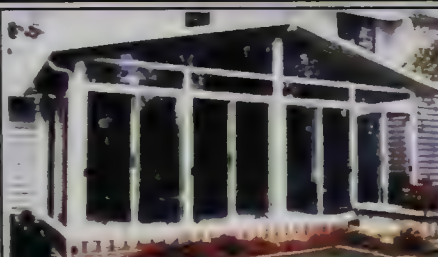

Darren Lum, a photographer for the Haliburton County Echo and the Minden Times, recently spent a month in South Korea as part of a Rotary Club Group Study Exchange program. His photograph of this gorgeous waterfall is outside the city of Chuncheon, in one of the country's national parks. The fierce-looking wooden statue, above, is a Buddhist temple guard in Wonju in the Chi-akson National Park. All Buddhist temples have four such guards to fend off evil spirits. Friends forever

DARREN LUM

Staff Reporter

THERE WERE FIVE people who made the journey to South Korea, including myself. Group Study Exchange Leader, Brian Menton, spent most of his career in education in the Northwest Territories before moving to Gooderham with his wife, Dorothy, to open a bed and breakfast. Carnarvon resident Kate Hall is the co-ordinator of the U-Links program in Minden. Robert Lamarre is a building inspector near Peterborough and Melanie Gagnon is child protection worker from North Bay.

We departed from Toronto's Pearson International on April 5 and finished the journey on May 5.

While in Korea, aside from Rotary functions that consisted of dinners, member inductions and various presentations, we visited historic landmarks, Buddhist temples, universities such as Kangnung University, museums such as the Wonju book museum, tourist attractions such as the Somchok caves where ceilings are covered with stalactites stretched 40 metres high and a folk village that depicted life as it was 500 years ago.

One thing that really stands out was the first trip to the Demilitarized Zone (DMZ). The DMZ area we went to was not for the public, but was designated for military personnel only. Since we were with the Rotary Club, we were provided special access to the area. There was an unsettling feeling there as armed soldiers stood watch on towers only 100 metres away. The air was thick with tension.

A lasting image was a tree more than a 1,000 years old. It stood behind a temple in the middle of a farm field. In the distance, through the haze, a ferris wheel rose from the horizon, contrasting with the natural surrounding beauty.

Heart divided between two lands

DARREN LUM

Staff Reporter

LUCK GAVE ME a one-month trip to South Korea, but it was my heart that earned friends for life.

It's funny how things can happen. One second you don't know where you'll be the next month – the next thing you're in another country on the other side of the world eating Kimchi.

I wasn't even expecting to go to Korea for the Rotary Group Study Exchange Program (a Rotary-sponsored trip that enables professionals to learn about their own industry in another country and to learn about different cultures).

After all, being chosen as an alternate to the GSE team, I didn't think I was going anywhere near Korea. Let's go back several months earlier ...

Brian Menton, GSE leader, and co-worker at the Echo, told me he was leading a group of young professionals to act as ambassadors for Canada and Rotary. He said I had as good a chance as any so I filled out the necessary applications and waited for a month. Life went on as normal during the month moving between the office and assignments and working towards the weekly deadlines. I got an e-mail stating I had made the first cut so, after a preliminary screening by various Rotary members, what followed was a thorough, in-person interview in North Bay. In a hotel conference room, sitting at a table surrounded by five Rotarians, each candidate brought a five-minute speech on why he/she wanted to go and what he/she hoped to accomplish during the trip. Following this was a question-and-answer session headed by five Rotarians.

I wasn't chosen in the selection process but, about a month before the team was to go to South Korea, one of the members discovered she was too far into her pregnancy and decided not to go.

I was in.

Before I left Canada to go to South Korea, I didn't know what to expect – except the unexpected. I left behind family, friends and the familiar to live amongst strangers in a strange land under foreign customs. Little did I know that when I returned to Haliburton, I would be leaving pieces of my heart scattered throughout South Korea.

It was in the first week that I quickly learned how thoughtful the Korean people could be. Within days of learning about GSE team leader Brian Menton's birthday, they arranged a small party headed by the Rotary district governor who made a four-hour round trip for the occasion. They gave gifts and a birthday cake. Simple things. This conscientious gesture was one of many on our trip.

Now, when I drive to newspaper assignments and perspire under the Ontario summer sun, I will remember the warmth extended to us while in Korea. Every week was a lesson in Korean hospitality and generosity, taught to us by the various Rotary families who not only welcomed me and the other GSE members to their homes but their hearts. From a police detective to a sign-maker, these host families put us at such ease that we all felt like we were more than family. Despite each host family's belief that they could have done or given us more, all of them displayed great compassion and concern for our well being, made evident through subtle gestures like bringing herbal drinks on long drives to prevent car sickness.

With the sounds of 'cheers' and of clinking glasses, my mind will wander back to a time when the outpouring of liquor was only matched by the flow of love by the Korean people.

When I left Korea, there was a momentary sense of great loss. Now, thinking back, I may have left pieces of my heart in Korea, but my heart is full and rich.

Because, in exchange for my loss, I carry the Korean people with me, always.

Twelve-year-old Kenton Winn, a JDHES student, is off to an athletic leadership camp this summer.

Learning to be leaders

KENNETH JACKSON

Staff Reporter

J. Douglas Hodgson Elementary School is sending two students to the Ontario Educational Leadership Camps this summer.

The camps are put together through the Ontario Educational Leadership Centre, school boards and the Ministry of Education.

"We have two Grade 7 students going this year, Natalia Rico, 13, and Kenton Winn, 12," says Dave Kennedy, vice-principal of JDHES.

Kennedy says both students have shown terrific leadership capabilities and that is the idea of the camp.

There are three different types of camps: fine arts, leadership in diversity and athletics.

Both Natalia and Kenton will be going to the athletic leadership camp where they will learn how to run tournaments, house leagues and any other special activities.

Natalia says she is really excited about going to the camp this fall.

"I'm happy they picked me out of all those Grade 7's. It's a real compliment," says Natalia.

Kenton is equally excited.

"I think it will be so much fun. I can't wait to go," says Kenton, who loves to play hockey and snowboard at Sir Sam's.

Natalia played volleyball and basketball on JDHES's school teams this year, but says she also likes to snowboard at Sir Sam's.

The camps strive to increase the students' self-confidence so they can become leaders in their schools and communities through interests and skills they already possess.

"The idea is they will go to these camps to help develop the skills they already have and to learn more about leadership, so when they come back for their Grade 8 year they can help other students," says Kennedy.

Both Natalia and Kenton say the biggest problem is their parents bragging about the honour to their friends.

Natalia Rico plays volleyball and basketball at JDHES. She has been selected to attend an athletic leadership camp this summer.

NOTICE

Residence and cottage owners on a section of the Gull River between the base of the rapids at Horseshoe Lake and the Orillia Power Generation Corporation's power dam on the section known as "Minden Lake" - please be advised that commencing on July 2, 2002, the Orillia Power Corporation will begin a dam rehabilitation project at our generating station located on the Gill River at Concession 3, Lot 3 of Minden Township.

This work by Orillia Power is a proactive step to ensure that long-term structural integrity and the safety of the dam structure is maintained.

The project will be done in two phases. The first phase of the project will begin on July 2nd and will extend through until October 31st, 2002. This phase of the project will involve the removal of the deteriorated concrete and pressure grouting of the dam's construction seams. This will be followed by the restoration of the dam's crest. In order for the work in phase one to be carried out, it will be necessary to lower the water level in this reach of the river by two feet in elevation, from elevation 960.0' to 958.0' for the duration of the first phase of the project. We appreciate your understanding in our commitment to maintain our high level of public safety at our station.

Phase two of the project will commence early next spring (2003) and will involve the replacement of the concrete back to its original specification. There will be no reduction of the water elevations required for phase two of the project.

Should you have any questions or concerns regarding this project, please contact Brian Burnie at 1-705-326-2495 extension 230 or write to: Orillia Power Generation Corporation, P.O. Box 398 Orillia, Ontario, L3V 6J9.

Grads look ahead to the future

KENNETH JACKSON

Staff Reporter

They may have taken different roads from most students looking to graduate, but 17 adult learning students earned their Ontario Secondary School Diploma June 21.

The graduation ceremonies took place at the Haliburton Legion and were full of laughs and gratification.

"This evening celebrates two aspects of our Centre (Highlands Community Learning Centre), the joy of learning and the accomplishments of our graduates," said Laura Willis to the crowd of approximately 150.

The mathematics and communications teacher at the centre spoke about how diverse the group of students were throughout the year.

"Our learning centre has become a micro-community within the geographic area of the Haliburton Highlands," said Willis. "The centre's population is diverse. Our students travel from Wilberforce, Kennis Lake, Minden and Saskatchewan Lake and their ages range from 15 to 58 years of age."

"No matter where the demographics are, we all share courage, dignity and pride in ourselves, our fellow students and school."

The graduation had two Valedictorians and both mentioned in their speeches how much they value their teachers.

"The instructors deserve a lot of the credit and a round of applause," said Sharon Bacon, 53. "We wouldn't be here without you."

The other valedictorian was Joe Burton, 23.

"The staff was excellent. If we had questions they answered them and if they didn't have the answers they found them," said Burton. "It's hard not to succeed if you are surrounded by them."

Bigger and better ▲

Silver Maple Motel, opposite Head Lake on County Road 121 in Haliburton, may be bigger than when you last saw it. Over the winter a new section was put on. Riitta Donohue, left, who is said to be the best housekeeper in town by her boss, Gabrielle Gervais, stands in the new section of the motel.

New chiropractor ►

Dr. Katie Hammerschmidt, right, opened Haliburton Chiropractic in April. Dr. Hammerschmidt says she moved to Haliburton to escape the pollution of the south. Her office is located on Highland St. at the side entrance of the Country Pickin's building, facing Head Lake.

What's new?

New owners ▲

The Lakeview Motel on County Road 121, just outside of Haliburton, has new owners. Just recently John and Holley McDonald bought the motel. Originally from Newmarket, John and Holley vacationed in cottage country - Holley's sister also lives in the area. So they moved north!

Tears for Jennifer

And other graduation day memories from the files of Echo editor Martha Perkins

IN JUNE OF 1986, I was sitting in the cavernous double gym at J. Douglas Hodgson Elementary School, waiting for the Grade 8 graduation to begin so I could cover it for The Echo. I had arrived in Haliburton the previous September so, while some of the people who were using their programs to fan away the summer heat were familiar to me, I didn't really know many of them.

To pass the time, I began to play what would become one of my favourite games: piecing together the puzzles of people's lives. Who was married to whom, who was whose child/brother/sister and, as the adults took pictures of specific graduates, who had begat whom. Some may call it a small-town version of Survivor, since it's so easy to unwittingly bad-mouth someone's relative if you're not aware of all the family ties, but for me it is like reading a book and being fascinated by all the plot turns.

When it came time for the valedictorian's speech, I was caught up in the mood but was totally unaware of how strong my own reaction would be when the valedictorian, Jennifer Brydon, started to cry – especially when she got to the part about her favourite teacher, Pat Bain. To my absolute horror and embarrassment, I started to cry, too. Geez, I didn't even get this emotional at my own Grade 8 graduation. All I could do was hope no one else had noticed my loss of professional demeanour.

That afternoon in June, I learned a few lessons about life in the Highlands. One of them is that graduations are big here. Really big.

A couple of years later, I was covering another graduation, this time at the old Victoria Street School. The principal was Ruth Gorrie and one of the kindergarten students receiving her rolled up "diploma" was a shy, blond-haired girl named Liane Dron. Only I didn't know it was Liane Dron. All I knew was that, when my film was developed, my picture of her and Mrs. Gorrie was the best of the bunch and therefore the one we used in The Echo.

That simple act of taking a child's picture spawned a friendship that has lasted the subsequent 13 years. Liane's parents, John and Diane, were thrilled Liane's picture had been taken, especially since they felt so badly about not being able to make it for the ceremony, and when they came in to the office to order a photo reprint, our first conversation set the foundation for many more to come. The Drons are among those good, caring, gentle, compassionate people who make the Highlands such a strong community and I was happy to call them friends.

Sandwiched somewhere between that first Grade 8 graduation and Liane's kindergarten graduation, I took another picture, this time of the Victoria Street School parade. All the kids were invited to dress up in period costume – whatever period of Canada's history they chose. Representing Haliburton's pioneer days was Jamie Woodman, pushing her young daughter, Megan, in a stroller. What endeared me to this photo was the fact that Megan wasn't even in school yet; her mother just loved getting dressed up for a parade.

Jamie and her husband, Gord, owned Bins and Baskets, one of my favourite haunts, especially around two in the afternoon, when I couldn't write another word without an infusion of candy. While I debated whether it was a Hot Tamale day or a jube-jube kind of day, we started talking about The Echo and what types of jobs were available. Ten years ago, Jamie found out for herself what The Echo was like when she joined the newspaper as a graphic designer. Today, her friendship is one of the ones I rely on to keep me sane in this sometimes turbulent business.

Here at The Echo, you can always tell when the mothers are talking to their children on the phone. Their voice drops an octave, instantly turning them from the fun-loving women I know into stern disciplinarians their children know them as. Jamie was a master at this instant transformation, especially when her children became teenagers. Megan was never "in trouble" but she got the stern-voice treatment fairly often.

I like to think I had something to do with Megan's successful negotiation of her teenaged years. When she turned 13, I made her promise she wouldn't become one of those snarky teenagers, snarkiness and sulkiness being the two major sins in the Perkins household when I was growing up. I'm pleased to say she kept her vow, although I do have a suspicion that her parents actually had more to do with it than I did.

On Wednesday night, both Liane and Megan will graduate from Haliburton Highlands Secondary School and, of course, I'll be there, camera in hand. I'll be there partly as a reporter and partly as a friend. Like their parents, I'll wonder how this came to pass, how they grew so old, so fast while I've hardly aged a bit. But at least if I start to cry, especially when Megan gives the Grade 12 valedictorian speech, I'll know I don't need to be embarrassed. Crying is only natural, here in the Highlands, when you've watched these kids, sometimes over their entire lifetime to date, grow and blossom into such wonderful people.

Martha Perkins (at left, as she looked when she covered her first JDHES graduation in 1986 and, at right, as she is now), has worked at the Haliburton County Echo for almost 17 years.

Snow way!

MEMBERS OF HALIBURTON'S Royal Canadian Army Cadet Corp. #1129 participated in the Cadets Caring For Canada program June 8. The cadets assisted with two projects at the Haliburton Highlands Outdoors Association fish hatchery.

They worked under the direction of John Ball, hatchery chairman, and Ryan Sisson, hatchery assistant. The exercise was co-ordinated by Kyla Matheson, administrator.

Their first assignment was to remove the sediment from the bottom of a pond that had been drained. This pond had contained brook trout over winter. The pond bottom must be cleaned before the pond is filled with water and new fish introduced. Several 205-litre drums were filled from the pond bottom before the task was completed.

The second assignment was to use a seine net to remove fish, crayfish and one large snapping turtle from a pond that was being drained before being refilled and a new fish species introduced. The fish and other wildlife were released alive in an adjoining waterbody on the hatchery property. If they hadn't been "rescued" by the Cadets, many might have died as the pond was drained.

The Cadets' Caring for Canada project is funded by the Department of National Defense. It is a nationally recognized day in the Canadian Cadet movement when many of Canada's 55,000 Air, Sea and Army Cadets carry out projects to improve Canada's environment.

This was one of the last official functions of #1129 Army Cadets for the 2001-02 training year. Twenty local Cadets are off in early July on various summer training courses at CFB Borden and Connaught.

Royal Canadian Army Cadet Corp #1129 resumes regular unit training on Tuesday September 3 in the Haliburton Legion. If you are between 12 and 19 years old and have an interest in learning new skills in a challenging environment give Army Cadets a try!

Graduation Day: a time of great joy, nostalgia and pride

community news

harcourt

Valerie Smith
448-3840

GRADUATIONS are a time of great joy, nostalgia and pride. Graduations are a time for students to remember the accomplishments of this past school year during which they have studied and calculated, and built upon their knowledge base. This week in our schools, many students will be graduating from one grade to the next or to another school. They will be closing one door and opening another.

As they reflect upon the possibilities for the future, may they know how proud their parents, family, teachers and community are of their accomplishments. May they take what they have learned and apply it to the rest of their lives and may they be secure in the knowledge that everyone cares about them and their future.

Graduations are also a time for us to honour our teachers, principals, vice principals and school support staff. They have earned the pride that fills them at this time of the year when they see their students graduating. They have spent a whole year imparting knowledge to these children that will help them discover their place in life. They have given their students many delightful memories to carry forward with them for many years to come. A big thanks to these people for all their patient hours of hard work.

May students and staff all have a very safe and enjoyable summer.

Attention all children ages 7 to 16: there's a year end dance at Harcourt Community Centre on June 28 from 8 p.m. - 11 p.m. Admission $3. D.J. Cindy will be on hand to provide you with great music. Prizes and lots of fun - see you there.

Talking about summer makes one think of flowers and in Harcourt we have flower barrels scattered in and about our town. Their pleasant appearance is a testimonial to the hard work of our gardening volunteers. The group met with spades in hand and tackled the gargantuan task of filling the flower barrels with soil, planting the flowers and strategically distributing the barrels along the town of Harcourt streets. Your hard work and effort is much appreciated and will be enjoyed by many throughout the upcoming summer days

A fresh welcome for Wilberforce

ATTRACTIVE 'WELCOME to Wilberforce' signs now grace the three main entrances to our village. They were installed on Saturday, June 23, 2001. The soft, creamy lettering shows up tastefully against the dark, burgundy background. In some lights the colouring seems an earthy brown which works well with the lush, green foliage and should be equally attractive with winter's white and autumn's array of colours.

Located further out of the main village and its small blue signs, more of the area that includes Wilberforce residents are now within the signed area. Two of these welcoming signs are located beside County Road 648; one is just before Lake Wilbermere as you approach from the south; the other as you come from Harcourt, just up the hill from the 'ponies' pasture' and Richardson's Falls. The third sign is beside County Road 4 as you come in from Essonville just before Cockle Lake.

The founding date selected for the signs is 1879, that being the year the first Wilberforce Post Office began operating. William Riley was the first postmaster and ran the post office from the Riley home just north of Lake Wilbermere, up the hill on the west side. (Of course, people had settled in the area before that date, arriving soon after the original survey in 1862.)

If you pause by one of the signs you will note the Highlands East logo at the top.

While the signs were being installed by Terry Godfrey, Eric Barnes, Gary Stoughten and sign creator Andy Hillo, others were busily improving the roadsides by doing a garbage pick-up. Others came to BBQ some hamburgers and hot dogs at the fire hall for the volunteers.

Giving generously of their time were Joan and Ken Noble, Winn Agnew, Kathy Rogers, Doug Stephen, Jodi, Mike and Drew Rupnow, Hilda Clark, Nataly Goulet, Dorothy and Harold Bebbington, Judy Johnson, Gerda and John Goverde. Though the Rec Committee members had expected and hoped for many more volunteers, they were thankful for a great job done by those who did help out. Kathy Rogers, chair of the Rec Committee, ably organized all the efforts and we thank her and all who contributed in any way. The new signs are worth all the effort.

New signs are in place and so is new cenotaph

The new cenotaph arrived late last week and sits proudly on its new base. It faces the street now and a ramp has been installed to make it more accessible. Mac Hughes, a stone mason and member of Legion Branch 624, has been responsible for much of the work at the site. The official unveiling ceremony will be held on Sunday, July 7 after lunch. More about this new monument at that time.

A fundraiser for the Legion's Cenotaph Fund was held at St. Margaret's Church on Wednesday, June 19. During both afternoon and evening delicious desserts and coffee were enjoyed after the viewing of a documentary on the art of the First and Second World Wars. Free will donations from the event are being presented to the Legion for the cenotaph.

Among the upcoming events around the holiday weekend are the United Church's Strawberry Supper on Saturday, June 29 at the Lloyd Watson Centre from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m. Adults $9, children 6-10 pay $4.

Also on June 29 the Outpost Historic House opens for the summer. Hours are 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. daily. On that day there will be a special Open House from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. to officially kick off the 10th year that the W. Heritage Guild has operated the museum. Drop by for tea and a cookie and, of course, to visit the displays.

Of course, Canada Day celebrations are also at the Outpost and grounds on Monday, July 1, 2002. Flag raising by Legion members is at 11:30 a.m. followed by the Gentlemen of Song entertaining. There's free coffee and Canada Day cake to celebrate our 135th birthday as a nation. Sandwich plates will be for sale. Pontoon boat rides will again be available and there's lots of time to rejoice in our good fortune to live in such a good country.

Among the yard sales on this Saturday, June 29 is one at St. Margaret's Church. Starts at 9 a.m. There is lots of good stuff this year.

Registration for swimming lessons is also on Saturday, June 29 at the Wilberforce Fire Hall from 9 a.m. to noon. Fee is $20 per child for each two-week session or any part thereof. Lessons start July 1 at Wilbermere Lake.

June 29 ends with a Saturday night dance at the Monmouth Arena featuring David Wilcox.

450 IN MEMORIAM

CLARK, GORDON - In memory of Gordon Clark who passed away June 28, 2000.
Sadly missed along life's way
Lovingly remembered every day
No longer in our lives to share
But in our hearts, you're always there.
Lovingly remembered by his wife Joan.

McCOLL, ELSIE - In loving memory of our dear sweet grandmother and great grandmother Elsie, who passed away June 26, 2001.
We can't have old days back,
When we were all together,
But secret tears and loving thoughts,
Will be with us forever.
Sadly missed by Vicky, Larry, Jeremy, Krista and Steven

McCOLL, ELSIE - In memory of Elsie McColl who passed away June 26/01.
What would we give her hand to clasp,
Her patient face to see;
To hear her voice, to see her smile,
As in the days that used to be.
But some sweet day we'll meet again
Beyond the toil and strife,
And clasp each other's hand once more
In Heaven, that happy life.
Loved and missed by her family Beatrice, Clayton, Vera, Doris, Glen and Sylvia.

NICHOLLS, BARBARA - In loving memory of our dear mother who passed away June 21, 1998.
The memory of you is with us
Through every passing day
And the loving thoughts we have of you
Are in our hearts to stay
Debbie, Don, Tim, Chris, Eric, Maxine, Bill, Karen, Pam, Kelly.

NICHOLLS, BARBARA - "He only takes the best" - In memory of Barbara Nicholls, June 21, 1998.
God saw she was getting tired
And a cure was not to be.
So He put His arms around her
And whispered, "Come with me."
With tear-filled eyes we watched her
Suffer and fade away.
Although we loved her deeply,
We could not make her stay.
A golden heart stopped beating,
Hard-working hands put to rest.
God broke our hearts to prove to us
He only takes the best.
Sadly missed by Sheldon, Jeanette, John, Val, Amy, Donald, Wendy, Jenny, Sara, Ronald, Robert.
